BATTLE OF BRITAIN FLY-IN TO BOOST SIR KEITH PARK STATUE CAMPAIGN

- 4th Plinth Statue Campaign reaches new heights
- Two aircraft used in the Battle of Britain will fly in to Biggin Hill Airport
- Replica Messerschmitt 109 will also be flown into Biggin Hill Airport
- Battle of Britain veteran pilots reunited with aircraft from the Battle
- Images of the aircraft over London and with veterans will be available

A Spitfire and a Hurricane, which both saw action in the Battle of Britain, are to make a dramatic fly-in to London today in support of the campaign to see a statue of Sir Keith Park erected on the Fourth Plinth of Trafalgar Square.

The aircraft, a privately owned Hurricane which fought in a squadron under Sir Keith Park's command during the Battle of Britain and a Spitfire of the Battle of Britain Memorial Flight, will land at Biggin Hill Airport, famous for its Battle of Britain role as one of the commanding bases for the defence of London and South East England. The planes will be met by Battle of Britain veterans including Wing Commander Tom Neil, who flew from the fighter base at Biggin Hill during the Battle and is credited with 18 enemy aircraft shot down. He will be joined by more veterans, Campaign leader Terry Smith, Sir Keith Park's great-great niece Leigh Park and many other supporters.

This exciting event is the latest boost to a campaign which is continuing to grow and gain momentum. Since launching in March, the Sir Keith Park Memorial Campaign has brought together an impressive coalition of supporters, including senior serving and retired RAF commanders, politicians such as Tony Benn, Lord Tebbit, Boris Johnson and Brian Paddick; Battle of Britain veterans; members of Sir Keith Park's family and a huge variety of other supporters including Sir Patrick Moore, Edward Fox and Dan Snow.

Terry Smith said:

"The incredible sight of two iconic Battle of Britain fighters landing at one of their old bases is a fitting reminder of the huge sacrifices made by the RAF in defence of our freedom during the Battle of Britain.

It was the inspirational leadership and tactical prowess of Sir Keith Park which ensured their victory, yet the only tribute to Sir Keith in the UK is a road named after him near Biggin Hill Airport, and one at Uxbridge where he was based during the Battle of Britain. This is woefully inadequate for a man who was central to the UK's survival in 1940. Today's events will spur on the Campaign as we seek a fitting tribute at the heart of the capital he defended. I urge those who share our passion to visit www.sirkeithpark.com and get involved, by telling their friends and colleagues about this campaign, and supporting our petition."

The Campaign is going from strength to strength, with people from all over the world visiting the Campaign website and signing an online petition at www.sirkeithpark.com. Over 47 MPs from all parties have so far signed a Parliamentary motion, and many people are also signing a No. 10 Downing Street e-petition. Only last week a maquette – a scale model – of the final statue was unveiled at the RAF Club in London.
